Judiciary Committee Declares Lowery Wins In SGA Election

Constitutionalists Certified For Other Contested Posts

Handing down its decision on the investigation of the Student Government association election held on March 8, the Judiciary committee today declared that Jeanne Lowry has been elected representative from the graduate school in a reversal of the first tabulation results which indicated that Jim Beasley had a majority of the votes.

Constitutionalists, declared winners after the original count, were certified as elected to all other contested posts. These are Emily Jones, commerce lowerclass woman; J. Campbell Cantrill, arts and sciences upperclass man; Polly Jo McCulloch, arts and sciences upperclass woman; Claudine Gibson, arts and sciences lowerclass woman.

Much Confusion Is Found

"The committee finds that there was much confusion and some irregularities in the SGA election held on March 8 resulting primarily from the failure on the part of the SGA officers, election committee, and election officers properly to perform functions for which they were responsible," the official report of the committee states.

"While there is evidence of conduct on the part of certain students not in keeping with the standards generally observed by the students of the University of Kentucky and certainly not in keeping with the desires of the University administration and staff, the committee was yet unable to secure sufficient evidence to warrant a specific charge against any individual," it continues.

Regret Expressed Over Conduct

Expressing its regret that "the SGA did not find it possible to conduct its election in an approved fashion," the committee declared that it hoped "that the Association in the future will manage not only its elections but all of its other affairs in a manner in keeping with the generally fine reputation of the University and its student body."

The election, contested because evidence of fraud was produced, was investigated by the committee during the past week. Approximately 25 students appeared as witnesses in the closed sessions of the hearing. In its report, the committee expresses its appreciation to these students who assisted with the investigation.

Since the question of eligibility of candidates arose, the committee also ruled that a candidate must be a regular full-time student, as defined by the registrar, in an undergraduate college or the graduate school.

First Extra

Although no edition of The Kernel was scheduled for this week because of examinations, news of sufficient interest to the student body has developed to justify the publication of the paper's first extra.

Shortage of workers and lack of time has prevented the publication of a full-sized Kernel but the staff feels that the students should be served adequately by this sheet, issued in accordance with its policy of keeping the University promptly informed of all campus events.

500 ASTP To Leave Campus

Eggers To Replace Colonel Brewer

More than 500 of the 800 men in the ASTP will leave the University campus the latter part of this week for active duty, the military department recently announced.

The move is in line with the policy announced recently by the War Department whereby the present ASTP will be eliminated except for advanced engineers and professional students.

A proposed expansion of ASTP has been planned with future trainees being drawn from men who have satisfactorily completed basic military training and at least two terms of the A-12 courses.

Lt. Col. Louis W. Eggers, who replaced Lt. Col. Gerald Griffin as assistant professor of military science and tactics at the University, will succeed Col. B. E. Brewer as military commandant upon the latter's retirement this fall, it was announced.

Colonel Brewer will be relieved of active duty sometime in September, it was stated.
